COURSE DESCRIPTION
In this course, we will read and interpret works of some of the major figures in early modern European philosophy (roughly, the 17th and 18th centuries). This philosophy develops in tandem with the dramatically changing science of the day, often referred to as the “scientific revolution.” The rise of modern science brought about changes in our conception of the nature and structure of the material world; it also demanded a re-conceptualization of ourselves as human beings and of the nature and limits of human knowledge. We will thus explore some lively debates concerning the natures of self, world, and human knowledge.

OBJECTIVES
The aim of the course is not to provide a complete survey of philosophical activity in the early modern period, but rather to focus on selected works appropriate to the above themes. Since this is a course in the history of philosophy, our objective will be twofold. First, as a philosophy course our method will involve finding, analyzing, and evaluating the arguments that the philosophers offer in support of their positions. Along the way, we will introduce you to a number of basic philosophical concepts and tools. Second, as a history of philosophy course we must recognize that arguments and positions are embedded in historical texts. Consequently, we will have to engage in some textual interpretation to determine (as best we can) just what the philosophers’ positions are and how their arguments are supposed to provide support for them. Along the way, we will work quite hard on developing your skills in critical reading, clear writing, and cogent argumentation.

REQUIRED TEXTS

These are texts that will be reading in their entirety (or nearly), and so it is worth buying the text if you are able (if you are not able, please talk with the teaching staff and we will try to work something out). These texts are available at the Coop and also on Amazon.com. It is important that you have these very translations/editions!

OPTIONAL TEXTS FOR REQUIRED READING

These are texts from which we will be reading selections, listed in order of their appearance on the syllabus. The selections are available on the course website as pdf or hyperlink to online copies in Hollis, but if you would like to access more of the text or own a hard copy, we recommend the following editions.

RECOMMENDED COMMENTARIES
These are texts you might find useful not only for clarifying the texts, but also for illustrating what philosophers do with these texts and what the interpretive controversies are. They are available at the Coop and online at Amazon.com.

COURSE REQUIREMENTS

Lectures. You are expected to attend lectures, which are on Mondays, Wednesday, and a number of Fridays (more or less, every other Friday).

Readings. Weekly reading assignments range from about 30 to 100 pages per week. It is absolutely essential that you complete the reading in preparation for lecture. The material is difficult, so you will need to read each selection several times. Your questions about the material and your discussion in section will be critical to everyone’s comprehension of it.

Discussion Sections. There will be weekly discussion sections conducted by the teaching fellows. These sections give you the opportunity to raise questions about and discuss the readings with others. They are, for that reason, a vital part of the course. Participation in section is required to pass the course.

SECTIONING WILL BE DONE ONLINE ON FRIDAY JANUARY 26

Writing. You will write two 3-page essays, two re-writes of the 3-page essays, and two 1-page writing exercises (with no re-writes). The first 3-page essay will receive comments and advice, but no actual grade (we will, however, tell you what the grade would have been); the idea is to give you an honest assessment of your baseline writing and advice on how to improve it without penalizing you for not knowing yet how to write a philosophy paper. (It takes practice.) The 3-page essays are designed to help you focus your reading and develop your critical reasoning skills by reconstructing and evaluating arguments. The point of re-writing is to improve your writing and critical reasoning skills by responding to feedback. The tentative due dates for the 3-page essays and re-rewrites are WEDNESDAY FEBRUARY
7, Friday February 23, Friday March 30, and Friday April 13. Essays are due in the dropbox for your section on the website by 9:00 p.m. on the due date.

You will also write two 1-page writing exercises. The point of the 1-page writing exercises is to hone a particular philosophical and writing skill. Don’t be fooled: writing a good single page of prose can be even harder than writing a good 3-page essay! You will want to give yourself plenty of time to work on these. The tentative due dates for the 1-page writing exercises are Friday March 2 and Friday April 20.

All 6 writing assignments must be handed in to pass the course.

Assignment Policies
We will grant no extension without a documented excuse from a doctor or dean. Late assignments will be marked down 1/3 of a grade for every 24 hours that they are late. No exceptions.

Help with your Writing
The Philosophy Department has a Departmental Writing Fellow. This year the DWF is Javier Caride. He is available to help with your paper writing throughout the term. For details see this webpage.

Final Exam. There will be an essay format final exam for the course during exam week, on May 12, 2018 at 9 a.m. We will hand out study questions prior to the exam, and the exam will consist of a subset of those questions.

Grades. Grades will be calculated as follows: Essay 1 (0%); Essay 1 re-write (15%); Essay 2 (10%); Essay 2 re-write (20%); 1-page writing exercises (10% each); final exam (20%); section participation (15%). Note, again, that you will not be graded on the first 3-page essay (which is why it receives 0%), but it is required and the harder you try on that the better your grade on the re-write is likely to be.

Conduct. Students and instructors alike must contribute to an environment that is conducive the learning. This involves, among other things, respectful behavior in class like showing up on time, refraining from talk that does not contribute to the class, etc. Academic dishonesty (including inappropriate collaboration and plagiarism) will be dealt with sternly. Please see the course policies on the website for more discussion of these issues. If you have any questions at all about what constitutes inappropriate collaboration or plagiarism ask.

Course Policies
Please see the course website for a list of policies (and reasons for those policies) concerning the use of personal electronic devices (including laptops, tablets, and phones) in lecture, taking the course Pass/Fail, switching sections, missing sections, extensions and late papers, rewrites, and drafts.
ACADEMIC INTEGRITY
Discussion and the exchange of ideas are essential to doing philosophy, and so we encourage you to talk about the course material with other students and do your own research in the library and online. On the other hand, the work on your essays and your exam must be entirely your own. If books, articles, websites, or discussions have helped you with your paper, cite them in proper footnote and bibliography form. Plagiarism and other forms of academic dishonesty are serious offenses that undermine the trust on which the scholarly endeavor rests. They will be dealt with sternly.

ACCOMMODATIONS FOR STUDENTS WITH DISABILITIES
Students needing academic adjustments or accommodations because of a documented disability must present their Faculty Letter from the Accessible Education Office (AEO) and speak with me (AS) by the end of the second week of the term. Failure to do so may result in my inability to respond in a timely manner.
