

Contents

ABSTRACT	iii
TEXTUAL NOTE	vii
EPIGRAPHS	ix
0 Introduction	1
0.1 Our target passage and some contrasts	1
0.2 A few quasi-Anscombean reflections	5
0.3 But now applied to core concepts from Aristotle	10
0.4 The first of three misreadings: on normative knowledge	11
0.5 The second misreading: “Not knowledge but action”	16
0.6 Two replies	19
0.7 The third misreading: on virtue’s equipment	25
0.8 The strategy for what follows	31
0.9 Wider themes	38
1 Action as Intention	51
1.1 Abstracting from Aristotle	51
1.2 The standard story of action	54
1.3 “We do not add anything”	61
1.4 A mundane tale and our proposed entailments	77
1.5 Action as a heap	87
1.6 Action as a unity	95
2 The Demands of Prohairesis Activity	109
2.1 Eudaimonia as acting virtuously	109
2.2 An equivocating Aristotle?	117

2.3	Prudentialist eudaimonism and the Function Argument	131
2.4	Aristotle’s targets	140
2.5	The reformed immoralist	147
3	Aiming at the Common Advantage	152
3.1	The intentionalist reading	152
3.2	Reasons for resistance	163
3.3	Extensionalizing correctness, I: the common advantage’s beneficiaries	168
3.4	Extensionalizing correctness, II: the common advantage’s content . .	182
3.5	The rationale of the intentionalist reading	187
3.6	Incorrectness and conceptions of virtue	192
4	Political Akrasia	204
4.1	Some familiar complaints	204
4.2	“A sort of Machiavellian realism”	211
4.3	A modified Jaegerism	219
4.4	Irwin’s political prudentialism	221
4.5	Punishing the innocent	231
4.6	Akrasia and political stability	238
5	Conclusion	262
6	References	266